AMERICAN CHARACTER.

There is a strange notion prevailing in England, that the society, in America, is yet in a rule state that the American is and must be for some time, an unpolarhed nation, that, when they become polished, and when great riches are accountated by individuals, they will have as much pagnerion and as many comes as we are accomulated by individuals, they will have as much pauperiem and as many coines as we have; and, that ours has only been the unavoidable progress of civilization and refinement.—
If this were true, it would be impossible to druy, that during this king's regg, we have made a most wonderful progress in the subline arts of polishing and refining, seeing that since 1761, the paupers have increased an hundred told. Gen. Campbell's account of the captur Gen. Campbell's account of the capture of Donabew from the Burmese describes the fol-lowing novel and interesting scene, witnessed by both armies. In a sortic by the Burmese, it seven (e) large elephants, each carrying a complement of armed men, and supported by a column of infantry, were observed moving down towards our right flank: I directed the down towards our right Bank: I directed the body guard under Captain Sneyd, to charge them; and they acquitted themselves most handsomely; mixing boldly with the ele-phants, they shot the r rislers off their backs and finally drove the whole into the fort."

The Devil in the Tea-On an evening lately, The Bevil in the Tea—On an evening lately, a female purchased a quarter of a pound of tea at the shop of Mr. Carter, on Gabriel's hill, Maidstone. The tea was tied up, paid for, and deposited in the good woman's pocket, and away she trudged. She had not gone many steps before she felt the tea move—She fancied that this might be occasioned by her having inadvertently touched some external object. On she jugged, and every step she took, the tea renewed the jumping fit. nal object. On she jugged, and every step she took, the tea renewed the jumping fit.—At last, when she had reached the shop of Mr. Smith, the chemist, she became alarmed, and began to face; "the old gentleman" was playing her a truck, or that the tea dealer had not something alive in her nocket. She was playing her a trick, or that the tea dealer had put something alive in her pocket. She was alraid to put her hand in her pocket, but ran back to tae shop in a state of great agitation, scarcely able to articulate "tea!" "devil!" "alive!" On becoming more composed, and relating the cause of her alarm, it turned out that the person who tied up the tea had forgot to cut the string, and she had been walking down the hill with the tea dealer's twine unrolling itself as she went.

concluded, Miss Kelly is to commence an en- | e atremity of the state of Pennsylvania, at an | expense of fifty per cent. per hundred less than it would cost conveyed over land through our own state. This may appear hardly ere-dible—we confess, it carries with it something of the air of romance, but such nevertheless we are fully convinced, is the fact, and with such facts so strong and irresistible, is it not, on reflection, matter of astonishment, that the people of this state should thus long have permitted its acknowledged powers and energies to slumber? Can they now he sitate? Will they longer stand with folded arms, looking on, while their neighbours are reaping the harvest which belongs alone and properly to enterprize, industry and perseverance? Our legislators are now assembled, and will no doubt give us evidence of their correct estimate of a liberal and enlightened policy,witnessed in the silent, though unostentatious course which has been pursued by the managers of the Union Canal Company; but this is comparatively a small advancement, when we east our eyes over the map which exhibits ceptible of the highest state of improvement, though now presenting rather the character
